On the following pages, you'll find answers to some of the questions in the book! Do you know the answer to any others?

A crocodile opens its mouth when swimming, so water passes through its mouth and cleans its teeth. In some places, a little bird called a plover bird, sits in the crocodile's mouth and picks out tiny pieces of food stuck between its teeth. This brave little bird gets a meal, and the croc gets its teeth picked clean!

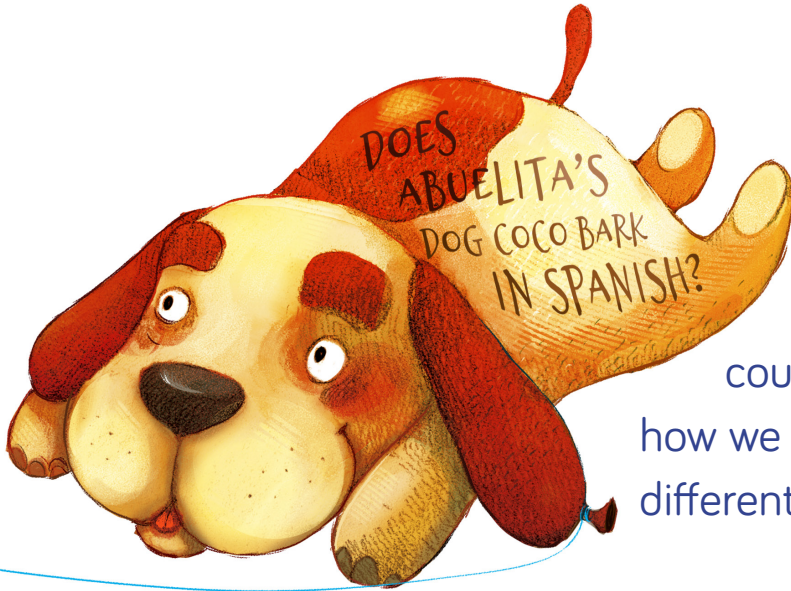

Peru is a country in Latin America; it is in the South American continent. Its neighbouring countries are Ecuador, Columbia, Brazil, Bolivia, and Chile. Peru has three main geographical areas – coastal desert, Andes mountains, and Amazon rain forest, so there is lots to explore. See if you can find an illustration of a globe in the book, and ask an adult to help you find Peru.

Yes and no! Dogs from different countries make the same noises, but how we describe that noise varies between different languages.

In English, we say “woof, woof!”, in other languages it’s...

Spanish – “guau, guau”

French – “ouah, ouah”

Scottish Gaelic – “uf, uf”

Polish – “hau, hau”

Japanese – “wan, wan”

Hindi – “bow, bow”

Do you know any others?

It might happen soon!
Technology is currently being developed that would allow space rockets to reverse (fly backwards). This means that the rocket would be able to return to Earth and the parts could be reused for another mission.
