Pathways from Pain to Meaning

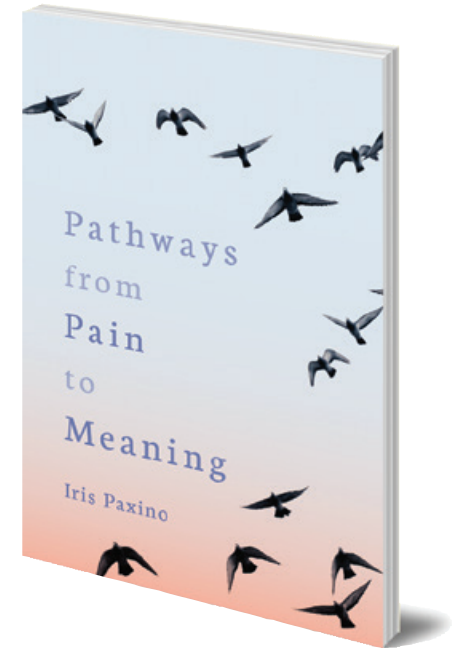

Short Thoughts on Pain in History and Personal Development

IRIS PAXINO

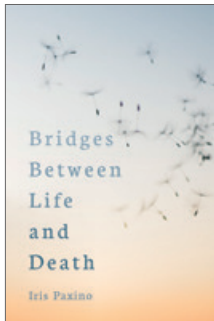

A sensitive and thoughtful consideration of the human experience of pain, written by an experienced psychologist

- Explores different types of pain from the physical (illness and injury) to the emotional (loss and deprivation) and spiritual (the absence of meaning in our lives), how they affect us, and what we can learn from them
- Discusses the impact of chronic pain and details treatment methods that aim to help sufferers cope more effectively
- Argues that, while pain should always be treated, when we learn to accept it as an inescapable part of being human we develop resilience, inner peace and compassion

Iris Paxino was born in 1970 in Bucharest, Romania. She lectures regularly in the field of anthroposophic psychology and runs a biographical counselling practice in Stuttgart, Germany. She is the author of several books, including Bridges Between Life and Death.
